The committee of the association has asked that an advisory committee be formed, seven members to be appointed by the president of the United States and eight to be selected by the association to make recommendations as to ranges and targets for the annual contests, and to prescribe a uniform system for the qualifications of experts in the use of the rifle. The object of the association is declared to be to raise the standard of marksmanship in this country.

Dual Meet Held at Marshall Field Yesterday.

FAST WORK WAS OUT OF THE QUESTION.

MARSHALL FIELD, Chicago, June 7.

The dual meet between the University of Chicago and the University of California was won today by Chicago by a score of 8 to 5.

Shortly after the games were called a drizzling rain set in, which finally ended in a terrific downpour, which put a stop, temporarily, to the events.

When the officials again called the athletes to resume the games there was fully two inches of water on the track, while the field was a miniature lake. Under such conditions fast work was out of the question. The best race of the day was the 220-yard dash, participated in by Blair and Senn of Chicago, and Callison of California. It was a close race throughout, but Blair won out in a hard finish.

WHALING DAYS.

But Few Are Still Engaged in This Dangerous Pursuit.

(Boston Journal.)

It was Professor Agassiz, the eminent naturalist, who made the prediction twenty years ago that within fifty years the whale would become extinct, and the prediction made may be verified in less time than he mentioned. In the years gone by, when great fleets went out from the United States, England, Germany and Russia to hunt the whale in every sea, even to within a few degrees of the north pole, he was usually slaughtered by the thousands, and one might have safely predicted his total extinction if the fleets continued their work. But they did not. Other oils came to be preferred, and in place of fleets, vessels went out only by threes and fours. The whales have been given a quarter of a century in which to restore their number, but it seems as if the respite came too late. In every known sea they have been growing scarcer year by year, and hunting the leviathan of the deep is now as uncertain as hunting the elk of the forest.

The hunting of the whale for his oil has been a long and arduous task, and it is quite a number of vessels pursuing him for the whalebone he yields. This is found in the Arctic whale alone, as no other species is thus supplied, and must be followed to the frozen seas of the north. There are uses for whalebone which no substitute can fill, but it seems as if there would not be a pound of it to be had in a few years. In 1726 no less than thirty-five whales were taken by the Nantucket fishermen, and old Southampton, L. I., was famous for the taking of the whale as far back as 1689, when the catch of that port was 1,000 whales.

To this day the men of Amagansett put off from the shore to the stirring cry of "There she blows!" The American whaling industry has had some serious setbacks. In 1831, thirty-three vessels left the whaling ports of the United States, and the Arctic fleet was crushed in the ice, and during the civil war the confederate privateer Shenandoah captured and burned a large fleet. There is precious little left in the whaling business as it was as mighty little profit.

Whale fishing was about the first industry engaged in by the colonists. All along the coast from Wilmington, N. C., to the mouth of the St. Lawrence, it was pursued with great success. During the year 1842 forty-two ships were sent from the town of Sag Harbor, L. I. That town and Nantucket were the principal whaling ports of the country. Today there is not a single whaler sailing from Sag Harbor. At the present time the majority of all the ships engaged in this trade are owned in New England, and the great bulk of the American whaling industry.

Latest advices from the whaling fleet are woefully discouraging. The catch for a twelvemonth amount to thirty-one thousand barrels, and this is a very small amount. There were twelve, and three vessels had no luck at all. During the present season only twenty-two were taken, the others being credited to the season of 1900. A few years ago there were 200,000 pounds of whalebone in the American market, and on Oct. 15 of last year the supply had declined to 75,000, of which 65,000 were from New Bedford. A recent sale of the price of whalebone a pound was quoted at $2.50, and New Bedford dealers say it will advance to $3 a pound.

The whale lives principally upon the kelp, or octopus, and its mortal enemies are the shark and swordfish. The meat of the whale tastes somewhat like beef, but is coarser and has a strong odor. The blubber is the most valuable product of the whaling industry. It is rarely found by whalers upon removing the blubber of the whale. The substance is of enormous value, and is used in the manufacture of soap. The largest quantity ever found at one time was taken from a whale by the schooner Waterman, of Nantucket. It weighed 60 pounds, and was sold in Boston for $1,300.

Whales are great travelers. For example, the ship Catawba of Nantucket struck a whale off the coast of Brazil, and twenty years later the same whale was found off the coast of the Galapagos Islands. In 1802 Captain Paddock of the ship Lion of Nantucket struck a sperm whale off the River La Plata, and was forced to abandon it. In 1815 he captured the same whale off the Galapagos Islands.

TOLD OF AMOS CUMMINGS.

His Ode to the Comfort-giving Old Shoes.

(Washington Post.)

Everybody knows that the late Representative Amos Cummings used to be a printer.

When the New York Sun moved into its new building years ago the compositors were lined up before "time" was called.

When the printer came out of the line in procession from the old to the new office. On the top of each "cap case" was a pair of shoes in which the types had shuffled about in working hours through untold years. The aggregate of the shoes was a great deal more than the people outside and was the talk of New York for a day.

Cummings, and every old printer will appreciate the lines which Cummings dashed off to meet the occasion:

Dear to the heart of the soldier his honor, And dear to the heart of the drunkard his booze; But nothing compared to the love of the printer, The foot-wearer printer for a pair of old shoes.

The cockroaches haunt them where'er he may plant them. They are not afraid with type, display and news. He may never wear them, but miles he will carry them. And throw up his "sit" he'll part from those shoes.

LOCATION OF YOUNG.

It is thought by Montana officers that a clue has been secured as to the whereabouts of Young, the escaped murderer of Geo. Yum.

While the reasons for the belief are not given, the Montana officers claim to have definite information that Young is in Butte.

One of the officers, Deputy Sheriff William McCann of Helena, has gone to Butte in the hope of locating the man, but he feels certain that Young will be located without a desperate fight, as he is supposed to be well-armed, and has declared that he would not again be taken alive, at least not while he could pull a trigger.

SERIOUS AFFRAY.

Colored Man and Three Women in Fight.

A cutting affray occurred at Diehl's butcher shop, on Center street, last night, the participants being a man named William Allison and three women, Edna Smith, Bertha Alexander and Bertha McClelland, all colored.

Captain Brown and Officer Chambers saw Allison and Edna Smith engaged in a lively scrap, and rushing across the street, placed them under arrest. Both were bleeding profusely. Edna shouted: "There are no other women want to get. Those are the ones we are after," pointing up the street. The officers overtook Bertha Alexander, who was carrying a large butcher knife, evidently taken from Diehl's fish stand, and all three were taken to the station and locked up. A physician was called in to dress the Smith woman's wounds, she having received a bad crack on the head and being badly bruised about the face. The trouble arose over a watch and chain and a pocketbook belonging to Edna Smith, and she accused the others of having stolen it. The pocketbook was found in Allison's possession. Bertha Alexander denied having done any carving, but the fact that she had a knife in her possession and the battered condition of Edna Smith's head would indicate a different story. The officers were hunting for Bertha McClelland at midnight.

The club was organized for the purpose of preserving the history of the city, and its business to preserve order among the members of the club and see that they are all in the same way. The club is composed of the enlisted force of our navy, and keep it in mind that a great majority of the blue-jackets are scoundrels from away back, and that they are not to be trusted. The club is about the hardest one in the service, and my sympathy is generally with a master-at-arms who gets into trouble of this sort.
